Sworn Statement

—OF A—

BOSTON POLICE OFFICER

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—From exposure I took sick about nine years ago with Rheumatic Fever, from which I suffered about four months. When I recovered from the fever I found myself suffering with pain in my side and constipation, which brought on the piles. I consulted a physician, and paid him over $200 for attending me, and all the while I was gradually growing worse. Then one physician after another was employed, until seven of the best physicians of Boston had taken my case in hand.

On consultation between several of the leading physicians, they concluded my complaint was asthma and general debility. I had great difficulty in breathing, and an inhaler was required to afford me breath. Through the treatment of one physician I took from 75 to 100 boxes of calomel pills, and faithfully tried all the medicine that each physician described. From my long sickness, and the vast amount of medicine used to overcome the great pain, my kidneys became badly affected, and I suffered excruciating pain in the small of my back, with great difficulty in passing my urine.

One physician said I was deceased all through my system, and he regretted that he could give me no hope for health. My suffering from indigestion was so great that it was impossible to keep any solid food on my stomach, and the whole nature of my food was broth from oatmeal.

I also took a prescription from a celebrated English physician, who said my trouble was Bronchitis and Dyspepsia. I took 18 bottles of medicine especially prepared for Dyspepsia, and I have used a great deal of medicine from apothecaries' prescription. I have taken Sarsaparilla until you could count the bottles by the dozen, and indeed I have given nearly all the popular advertised medicine a fair trial. I had a dreadful cough, and did not average over 2 hours' sleep a night for 8 years.

A brother policeman urged me to try Vegetine, but for a long time I refused, having got completely discouraged from taking so much medicine without any benefit; however, after urgent persuasion I concluded to try it, and before I had used one bottle I could eat and hold on my stomach a beefsteak, a thing I had not been able to do before for years; indeed, I obtained more substantial benefit from the first bottle of Vegetine than from all other medicines which I had taken. I kept on improving, and kept on using the Vegetine, until I was perfectly cured and able to do duty all day, eat and digest my food, slept well at night, and I am 40 pounds heavier than I ever was before in my life, and am, as I think, a living contradiction of the prophecies of the most learned medical talent of New England, for with all of their combined wisdom they could not accomplish so much as that simple vegetable medicine called Vegetine, to which I am indebted for health, life, and happiness.

EUGENE E. SULLIVAN,
367 Athens street, Police Station 4.

SUFFOLK ss., BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 22d, 1875.

Then personally appeared the above named Eugene E. Sullivan, and made oath that the foregoing statement is true, before me. HOSEA B. BOWEN, Justice of the Peace.

FURTHER PROOF.

FACTS WILL TELL

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ.:

Dear Sir—Allow me to say a word in favor of VEGETINE. During the past year I have suffered from a complication of diseases. I laid in bed from the 3d of November until the middle of the following June, and on an average did not sit up two hours a week; I had eight of the best physicians in the state, but got no help, and constantly grew worse. They agreed that I had heart disease, phthisis, pyaemia and kidney complaint, and could never be any better. I was reduced in weight 80 pounds, which is much for I am naturally thin.

In June, finding I was failing under the treatment of the physicians, I commenced the use of VEGETINE, through the earnest persuasion of friends, and I am happy to state, with good results. I have gained ten pounds in weight, and can sit up all day, walk half a mile and ride six.

I am greatly encouraged, and shall continue using the VEGETINE if I can get it. I am a poor man, but for the truth of this statement I refer to any man in Gloucester or vicinity. Yours, very thankfully,

A. J. BURBECK,
Gloucester, N. H.

GENERAL NEWS.

FROM NEW YORK.

CALEB P. MARSH.

Negotiations for His Return to Washington.

NEW YORK, March 17.

The Telegram's Washington special says on Monday last an officer of the Department of Justice left for Montreal with full authority from the Attorney General to negotiate with Marsh for his return. A written guarantee was forwarded, assuring Marsh of full immunity in case he returns as a state's witness in the criminal prosecution against Belknap. According to a dispatch received from the officer last evening, there is every likelihood that the negotiations will be satisfactorily concluded today, and Marsh will start at once on his return to Washington in time to testify before the grand jury Monday. This is done, not at the request of the committee, but wholly because the Attorney General desires to push the criminal prosecution of Belknap.

MURDER IN NEW YORK CITY.

A Woman Chopped to Pieces by a Drunken Brute.

Ann Hammond, forty years of age, was murdered at 214 Second avenue, tonight, by Thomas J. Bartell. He came home intoxicated, and after a quarrel with Mrs. Hammond, he seized a hatchet, and struck her several blows. Her head and breast were literally chopped to pieces. The murderer was arrested.

Foreign Goods for the Centennial.

One thousand five hundred and seventy-seven packages of goods from Spain for the centennial have been landed here this week; one thousand tons of goods have also been landed from Holland, and will be sent by rail today to Philadelphia.

Lawrence vs Dana.

Wm. Beech prints a card here saying that the degree of the United States circuit court in Boston, in 1869, established his title to the copyright of notes to Wheaton, and says Dana was convicted of literary piracy.

Not a Post Trader.

Gov. Campbell denies the story from Bismarck that he was interested in post tradership, and says he shall demand an investigation.

Concerning Wiard and his Jobs.

It is stated that evidence given before the naval committee yesterday, shows that Wiard had no patent for his boiler attachment, for which the government paid $72,000, and that the projectiles and guns for which he claimed patents, were worthless, and not invented by him. The amount paid for them by the government was not $32,000, but $117,000; total amount of losses to the government on this contract was $149,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CATASTROPHIE IN FRANCE.

The Freshet Destroys a Bridge—Thirty Corpses Recovered.

LONDON, March 18.

A Paris despatch to the Daily Telegraph says an arch of a railway bridge over the river Ill near Lutterbach, gave way under the pressure of the flood. A passenger train from Mulhouse for Strasbourg which was crossing at the time was precipitated into the river. The carriages fell on top of one another and were dashed to pieces. Owing to the violence of the stream, none of the passengers could be saved. All were either crushed to death or drowned. Thirty corpses have already been recovered.

EVACUATION DAY.

Boston's Centennial Celebration.

BOSTON, March 17.

A heavy snow storm is in progress. Several inches have fallen. In honor of the 100th anniversary of the evacuation of Boston by the British troops the custom house and many places of business were closed at noon and the departments at the state house at 1 P. M. Flags are profusely displayed from the shipping in the harbor, state and national buildings and many public and private edifices. A large number of historical buildings and locations have been decorated. Salutes were fired at sunrise from different quarters of the city, also from the navy yard and forts. There was a large attendance at the Old South church this forenoon. Historical addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Elliot and Rev. E. E. Hale, music by the Germania band and the singing of patriotic songs.

In New York and Brooklyn.

NEW YORK, March 17.

The annual procession in honor of St. Patrick took place today and fully thirty thousand men marched in line. The procession started from 23d street at 2 o'clock, headed by the Sixty Ninth Regiment, under Col. Cavanagh, after which came various societies. The procession was reviewed by Mayor Wickham and the common council. It also passed the residence of Cardinal McCloskey, on Madison avenue, and was reviewed by him. Tonight dinners will be indulged in by the Knights of St. Patrick, the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, and a mass meeting will be held in Cooper's Institute.

A large procession also paraded in Brooklyn. No disturbances are reported.

THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

The Pursuit of the Sioux by General Crook.

CHEYENNE, March 17.

On the evening of the 5th Mr. Fielding came into Fort Fetterman from the camp at old Fort Reno, having left there on the night of the 13th. He brought letters, &c., from the men of the command. On the 7th inst. Gen Crook left the main camp at Fort Reno, taking a back train and fifteen day rations for the cavalry, and struck out after the Indians known to be north of that place, since which date nothing has been heard from him. On the way to Reno the command was attacked several times by Indians. One man named Herder was wounded but is still alive. An infantry man was also wounded. No other casualties.

The Relief of Fort Pease.

CHICAGO, March 17.

The following is received at Sheridan's headquarters from Gen. Terry, commanding the department of Dakota:

MOUTH OF THE BIG HORN,
March 6, 1876.

Arrived at Fort Pease, March 4, and relieved the garrison. The fort was evacuated today at noon. The original garrison consisted of forty six men, of whom six were killed, eight wounded, thirteen left and gone to the settlements by night. I found in the fort eighteen white men and a negro. Have brought them away. I saw no Indians, but found five lodges here of about sixty Sioux, who fled South. I think they were watching the fort to pick up men who ventured out. We shall start for home tomorrow.

THE FLOODS NEAR PARIS.

Five Hundred Houses Abandoned at Nogent-Sur-Marne.

LONDON, March 17.

A dispatch to the times, dated Paris, March 16, 9:30, says the Seine and Marne are both higher than yesterday. The plain from Maison's Alfort to Villeneuve St. Georges is one immense lake. Boats traverse the valley from Villeneuve to Choisey. The senators and deputies representing Paris have voluntarily devoted two months' salary to the relief of sufferers.

A Paris dispatch to the News says that five hundred houses were abandoned Wednesday at Nogent-Sur-Marne.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Marsh, the Belknap Witness, to Return to Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 17.

Last Tuesday a trusty and competent messenger was dispatched to Montreal by order of the administration, with orders to find Caleb S. Marsh and offer him immunity from prosecution if he would return to Washington. As a precaution against counter-influences no information of this movement was given, and hence all reports hitherto circulated were mere surmises. Today, however, the President received from the House committee on the judiciary a request for some information concerning the matter of granting immunity to witnesses, which is found to be extremely difficult to handle, and this being transmitted to the Attorney-General in the afternoon Judge Pierrepont thought it but proper to inform the committee of the message to Marsh. Information was also communicated to the committee that a despatch had been received from the messenger announcing that, unless unforeseen circumstances prevent, Marsh would be in Washington on Monday next. These statements are made on the authority of the Attorney-General himself. It is feared that a strong effort will yet be made to keep Marsh away, since there is good reason to believe that he can give testimony of very grave consequence to other persons than Belknap. Reference is had, of course, to the Kentucky Central Railroad claim, concerning which it is asserted today, on authority of a well-known lawyer, that evidence exists and will be furnished, if necessary, to show the payment of a large sum of money in connection therewith by Pendleton, through the hands of two other persons, to Mrs. Belknap in New York city. A witness of the transaction, it is said, is under surveillance, and was quietly prevented from leaving the court last Wednesday.

The Soldiers' Tombstone Contracts.

Maurice J. Walsh of New York appeared before the committee on military affairs today in reference to soldiers' tombstones contracts. He claims that although his bid for first-class Carrara marble was only some $300,000, out of which $260,000 was to come back to the government in the shape of duty, on imported articles, the contract was given to a Mr. Bridges of Keokuk, Iowa, for $900,000, for American marble of a very inferior quality, and without any such advantage to the government. He charges also that Bridges' bid was put in after the hour fixed for the opening of the bids, and after two of his own [Walsh's] had been opened. He asserts that Bridges was also favored to the extent of $75,000, in a change of requirements in the specifications after the bids were in.

Sentenced.

B. B. Halleck, convicted yesterday of the larceny of $17,000 from the Treasury, was today sentenced to four years' imprisonment at hard labor in the Albany county penitentiary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FRIDAY, March 17.

SENATE.

Matters from the house were disposed of as follows:

Act to abolish the tribal organization of the Narragansett tribe of Indians. Referred to committee on judiciary.

Act to amend chapter 516 of the general statutes in relation to poor tort debtors. Referred to committee on judiciary.

Mr. Kenyon of Richmond introduced an act in amendment of chapter 517, of the public laws, in relation to railroad corporations. This act provides that corporations shall provide a suitable supply of drinking water, an axe and an iron bar on each car, and use no light except gas and candles under a penalty of $25. Referred to the committee on corporations.

The amendment to the constitution abolishing the registry tax was called from the table and put to vote.

All present voted in the affirmative.

Under suspension of the rules the resolution was communicated to the house.

HOUSE.

Mr. Pettis, of Providence, presented a remonstrance of Charles E. Fuller and others, against granting the petition of William J. Brightman and others, for an amendment of the charter of the Herreshoff Oil and Guano Company, changing the office of the company from Bristol to Tiverton. Received and referred to the committee on corporations. The remonstrance sets forth that the interests of a large minority of the stockholders (owning almost half of the capital stock) would be endangered by granting the prayer of the petition, there being an apparent disposition on the part of some of the managers of said company to manage its business more for their own benefit than for the benefit of all the stockholders, and to obtain full control of said company's affairs, to the detriment of said minority stockholders.

GEN. COOKE DECLINES.

WARREN, March 16, 1876.

William B. Beach, Esq., Chairman Democratic State Central Committee, Providence:

Dear Sir—The action of the Democratic state convention held this day, in nominating me as its candidate for governor, has caused no one more surprise than myself. I cannot, however, feel otherwise than gratified, for the unsolicited and wholly unexpected honor thus conferred upon me. It is particularly gratifying at this time, following as it does, so closely, my action as a member of the General Assembly, upon the subject of exemption from taxation, for which, it has been said, I had incurred the ill will and resentment of the Roman Catholics; but as the convention was liberally composed of this element, their unanimous assent to my nomination not only completely refutes this, but I am forced to believe that they fully endorse my course. It gives me the opportunity to state that no disrespect was thought of or intended by me in my allusion to them. The point I endeavored to bring out was simply this—that the controlling power of this church was held by one who was beyond the reach of the state legislature.

I am compelled, however, to decline the nomination. Candor compels me to state that for several years I have been convinced that the safety of our institutions is imperilled by a too blind adherence to party. I think that it is my duty to occupy an independent position; cutting loose from all party affiliations, and exerting whatever influence I may possess in securing the success of the purest and best elements in political matters. The exposures of the shameful corruptions of so large a portion of those either holding office under or connected with the present national administration, must convince every high-minded and honorable man that the time has arrived for a change of administration. My course in the approaching Presidential election will be governed entirely by circumstances, and these cannot now be foreseen.

Thanking the convention for the honor conferred, I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. LEWIS COOKE.

LITTLE COMPTON.

The regular monthly meeting of the town council and court of probate was held at the office of the town clerk on the 13th inst. The only business of importance before the meeting was the question of action on a petition for the removal of the windmills. This question has been deferred at several meetings, but was finally taken up. Considerable discussion followed as to what change was necessary to make them no longer windmills. It was decided that if their arms were removed, that they be allowed to stand on their present sites as monuments of their past usefulness. They are to be removed or dismantled on or before the first of May next.

The schooner Aid, of Great Eggs Harbor, from Philadelphia for New Bedford, loaded with 307 tons of coal, ran aground at Seaconnet Point about half past nine o'clock Monday evening. She lies on the sand in an apparently easy position, and leaks but little. If the weather continues favorable it is thought that she can be got off without much damage. The prevalence of these northerly winds make the tides unusually low, which, of course, is not favorable. The captain, who is a part owner, attributes his misfortune to a defective compass.

We regret the continued illness of Ezra Wilbour, Esq., who has been confined to his house for several weeks.

TIVERTON.

The Winter has been unusually open and mild allowing a great deal of enjoyment to those who love the exquisite scenery of this place, and the young people have been kept busy and enlivened with their new Whitridge hall, which has given them constant occupation in getting up theatricals, tableaux, etc. February 22d was well celebrated by a children's play and patriotic exhibitions. There has also been a course of lectures and a fine concert greatly enjoyed, by Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman. The Rev. Mr. Augustus Woodbury gave his excellent lecture upon Unwritten History and the Rev. Samuel Longfellow a talk about Switzerland. The Rev. E. E. Hale follows with the reading of his beautiful story, "In His Name," and the Rev. Mr. Cudworth finishes the course with "Ups and Downs of the World." "The Lady of Lyons" will be brought out this week, and "The Loan of a Lover" the week after. One of the most enjoyable evenings has been passed in hearing Prof. F. W. Wentworth, of Providence, read and recite. His dramatic powers are most admirable, his voice very clear and flexible and his taste unexceptionable. He goes from grave to gay with clever ease, and evidently is full of talent. The lyceums of the cities could not do better than to send for him. Prince Arthur's entreaties to Hubert to spare his eyes, from King John was most touching and the Creeds of the Bells were chimed out by Mr. Wentworth's remarkable intonations.

GAIL.—The Worcester Press thinks George Alfred Townsend exhibits himself in a detestable light in his letters on the home life of Belknap, whose hospitalities he has enjoyed, but whose misfortune he now derides. It says: "The Bohemian writer who may have been fortunate enough to be admitted where he could see something of the fireside life of the fallen man is not licensed to write out what he there saw and sell it to the newspapers for so much a line. That is trading in something which is prohibited where decency rules. The newspapers which Townsend favors with his communications have it in their power to shame him to a certain degree. Let them refuse to buy his merchandise until he brings to their market something which can be bought and published without violating the fundamental laws of decency, and he will be compelled to change his theme or to subsist on free lunches."

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1876.

THE DAY.

The Republican Senators, at their caucus in Washington yesterday, unanimously agreed to oppose the sweeping reductions in the appropriation bills proposed by the Democratic House committee.

A railway train was precipitated into the river Ille in France yesterday, and it is thought all the passengers on board perished. Thirty corpses have already been recovered.

C. K. Peck made some damaging disclosures before the war expenditures committee yesterday, with reference to Orville Grant's operations in post-traderships. One or two other parties were placed in rather an unenviable position by the testimony of the witness.

The government having granted immunity from prosecution to the witness Marsh, he is soon expected to return to Washington, and will testify not only in the Belknap case, but with regard to Pendleton's method of securing the settlement of the Kentucky Central Railroad claim. It is re-asserted, and evidence is believed to exist, showing conclusively that a large sum of money obtained by Pendleton went into the hands of Mrs. Belknap, although not paid directly to her.

There seems to be some interest among our people in regard to the Republican caucus on Monday night. A somewhat general feeling prevails that the time has come when the old party managers should be cast aside and men free from cliques and rings put forward. The caucus has grown into disrepute and unless some change of this character is made the force of a nomination will soon be gone. Let there be a full attendance, not simply of managers, but of the rank and file. These are times when new men should be called to the front.

An Italian physician has been experimenting with the effect of different colors on mental disease. He has found that small quantities of scarlet induce cheerfulness, but an excess of this color causes mania. Blue has precisely the opposite effect and calms or depresses according to the amount used. Brown is a sedative and violet a powerful tonic. This physician claims to have cured an imbecile patient who was continually petitioning the king to issue more paper money, by shutting him up in a room which was lighted through violet colored glass windows. The doctor neglects to say whether the patient's financial theories were the only evidence of his imbecility or not. He claims to have found excellent results following the exhibition of a blue vail or a brown pair of trousers to male and female lunatics. This is the first time that public attention has been called to the effect of brown pantaloons, but if the doctor is correct about the blue vail the Italians are a very peculiar people. In America a blue vail has been known to throw a young man into a violent state of excitement. In practicing with this new remedy the greatest caution should be used.

The correspondence between Gen. Schenck and the government, as transmitted by Mr. Fish to the House committee on foreign affairs, may be summarized as follows. On February 8th Schenck telegraphed that he had learned of the investigation ordered by the House of Representatives and would at once resign if his resignation would relieve the administration from embarrassment. On the 9th the President replied that this despatch called for no answer or action, but on the 11th he telegraphed to Schenck that while he still felt friendly to him, and regarded his connection with the Emma mine as indiscreet but free from improper motives, still his (Schenck's) despatch of the 8th had thrown on the President the responsibility of accepting or declining the resignation; that the latter course would seem like insisting on the minister's retention of his office in the face of a strong adverse public feeling, and therefore the President would accept Schenck's resignation. The minister replied that he couldn't reconcile this dispatch with the one dated two days before, but would nevertheless send on his resignation, which he did on the 19th, the document being dated the 17th. It was received on the 4th of March and accepted on the 6th. In the meantime Schenck asked for leave of absence to enable him to appear before the committee and it was granted. When he heard that the committee had reported and the House had ordered a farther investigation he telegraphed that he should leave England on a certain day: that as he had offered his resignation to relieve the President from embarrassment he presumed that now that he was himself under charges (as made by Lyon) the President would postpone the acceptance of the resignation till he had cleared himself. This was on the 2d of March; the day of the Belknap disclosure. But the President had decided on the 11th of February to accept Schenck's resignation, and on the 3d of March he telegraphed to the minister that steps had been taken to appoint his successor. As already stated, the resignation was received on the 4th and accepted on the 6th. It is not true therefore, that the President sustained Schenck till after the Belknap disclosures, nor that Schenck had ceased to be our minister before he left London. But it is true that the President was not unaware of nor wholly indifferent to the public opinion of Gen. Schenck.

It is a little singular that the Senate should be reluctant to confirm Mr. Dana because he quoted the same passages that William Beach Lawrence quoted. Precious few of its members are ever likely to suffer from the ravages of literary pirates. They are displaying in this affair a lofty disinterestedness that they have not prepared us to expect. Republican Senators who vote against Mr. Dana should remember that a great wail has been uttered, and has not yet ceased to be heard, because "the Gray is on deck again," in the House of Representatives. But if the state's-rights men succeed in defeating Mr. Dana the Gray will have won a greater victory in the Senate than it has in the House. It will prove that the Gray is on deck in both branches and that narrow minded Republicans hate liberality and broad views and conscientiousness a good deal more than they do the Confederate generals whose presence in Congress has been so much deplored. The term "Bourbon" has always been applied to Democrats, but if Cameron, Conkling and other Republican Senators can not learn that the people will not stand Butlerism the term "Bourbon" will apply to them. The call of the Republican national convention is broad enough to embrace Mr. Dana and a great many more independent men than he is, and if Republican Senators are going to reject Mr. Dana because he isn't a good enough Republican they will simply prove their own stupidity and endanger the success of the Republican party next Fall far more than the Belknap disclosures did. The people want good men, and if they are opponents of Ben. Butler, so much the better. They will not stand these close drawn party lines. The English people have had their respect for us undermined by Schenck's five years residence in London, and if they see Ben. Butler secure the rejection of Mr. Dana they will be perfectly excusable for having no respect for us at all.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

The missionaries of the Baptist churches of North America who were for a short time in Siam, are now permanently settled at Cocanada, upon the Godavery river in Burmah. This spot is to be the headquarters of the mission. In the region where these missionaries labor there are five million inhabitants.

An appeal has been made to the clergy and laity of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Virginia to raise an endowment fund of $25,000 for the theological seminary at Alexandria. Friends of the seminary in the North have subscribed the sum of $75,000, to be paid when the above-mentioned sum is contributed in the diocese.

Archbishop Purcell, Roman Catholic archbishop of Cincinnati, has issued a notice to all solicitors of funds for benevolent purposes that, on account of the urgent needs of his own people during the present hard times, no contributions will be raised in the churches of his archdiocese for outside purposes.

Miss Maria A. West, formerly of Harpoot, eastern Turkey, has sailed from Boston for Smyrna, where she is to undertake a work among the women, under the auspices of the American board. Some of her former pupils are now resident there, and through them and the native church and pastor she hopes to reach native women and children.

Rev. Dr. P. H. Fowler, for a long time pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Utica, N. Y., and now a member of the presbytery of Florida, writes that it is time and that the way is open to establish Northern Presbyterian churches in the South, as there is no prospect of a union with the Southern Presbyterians.

An association of members of the Orthodox Greek church has been formed in Athens, called the "Brotherhood of Lovers of Christ." Its designs are to improve the religious education of the clergy and laity of the church throughout the East, and to aid in the reunion of the churches represented at the conferences held in Bonn. The society is composed of leading members of the Greek church in Athens.

The Rev. Dr. A. P. Putnam has published an earnest and able sermon upon "Christianity and the Law of the Land," in which he rebukes the disposition to crowd the principles of Christianity from civil affairs and institutions. He confirms his convictions by an appendix containing the opinions of leading men of the nation upon the subject, from Washington, Adams, Jefferson and Franklin to Seward, Bancroft, A. P. Peabody and R. C. Winthrop. The sermon is published by request.

The Protestant missionaries of China have caught the spirit of fellowship and co-operation that is so characteristic of our time, and one hundred and ten of them have approved the plan of a conference which is to meet at Shanghai on the 10th of May. They are to discuss not only their own methods of influence, such as the better translation of the Bible, education, church membership, &c., but they are to consider the characteristic ideas, manners and institutions of the Chinese, and talk over Confucius and the other leaders of faith and life in the Celestial empire.

The Seventh-day Baptists of this country have greatly increased in vigor during the last few years. Their general conference held last Fall at Alfred Centre, New York, was larger than any former conference, being attended by 1000 persons. They support a missionary to Scotland and Ireland, the Rev. N. Wardner. The Seventh-day Adventists have also missionaries in Europe, namely, the Rev. Mr. Bondeau in France, the Rev. J. N. Andrews in Switzerland, and the Rev. Mr. Ertzenberger in Prussia. In Great Britain there are distributors of tracts upon sabbath (Seventh day) keeping in the cities of Belfast, Elgin, Glasgow, Grimsbury, Canterbury, Tewkesbury and London. An edition of 40,000 tracts upon sabbath-keeping is to be issued at Glasgow.

It is evident that among us, as everywhere in the Old World, religious and ecclesiastical interests are to have new prominence and to engage much of the time and thought of our people. Any one who will examine the recent files of city and country newspapers will be surprised at the space given to report of religious movements and discussions. To all appearances the disposition to separate church from state more thoroughly than ever is tending to make the churches more watchful over their own affairs, while the remarkable growth of ecclesiastical organizations, as these are now recorded in centennial reviews, is calling new attention to matters of denominational discipline and economy. It is clear that our great religious bodies have had much power in educating not only the intellect and affections, but also the talent for government and economy among our people. The large amount of money that has generally been so wisely handled, the number of persons trained for teaching, and the greater number of persons under their instruction, the domestic and social as well as more distinctive theological interests entrusted to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, make our religious chronicles an important part of our national history.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

—The police report that St. Patrick's day was unusually quiet.

—On Monday next the city bells begin ringing at 6 o'clock P. M.

—Charlotte Thompson will appear at the Opera House Monday night as Jane Eyre.

—The father of Caroline Hatfield went to Fall River yesterday with a detective, but no trace of the girl was found.

—The National Bank of the State of New York has several stockholders in this city though the amount of stock held is not large.

—A robin was seen here this morning. He is believed to be the early bird hunting for the traditional worm. Odes to the harbinger of Spring are in order.

—H. F. Marshall, a young dentist of this city, has moved to Phenix, R. I. and has succeeded to the practice of the late Dr. J. S. Clarke formerly of this city.

—It is reported that Mayor Slocum has sold the brick building on Market square which he lately bought at auction, to George Denniston, Jr., for $5000.

—The choir of the Shiloh Baptist church of this city will give a concert in Vaughan hall, Wickford, next Wednesday evening. The proceeds of the concert will help pay for the organ in the church.

—Miss McQueston, who sang with the Temple Quartette Thursday evening, goes from Boston each week to fill an engagement in the choir of the Central Congregational church in Providence at a salary of $1000 a year.

—Waters & Mitchell have floated the schooner Aid, reported ashore at West Island, Seaconnet river, and after making some repairs she will go to New Bedford with her cargo of coal.

—The schooner Lizzie D. Baker arrived here yesterday. While gybing the previous evening off Beaver Tail, the mate, Lewis Baker, was struck by the main boom and his right arm broken. It was set by Dr. Mott. One of the sailors also had his foot badly injured.

—The highway robbery case of the state aginst four young men for knocking down and robbing T. W. C. Salter, a jeweler in the employ of W. R. Pitman, last Fall, will come before the supreme court next week. One of the accused persons, G. W. Wright, who escaped before his indictment was read, has not yet been heard from.

—Capt. Hammond went to Fort Adams yesterday afternoon and arrested Mary Ostermeyer, who lives about three feet outside of the government reserve, for selling liquor without a license. The day previous, an Italian peddler was robbed of his pack of goods at her house and while the captain was engaged in searching for the missing goods he found unmistakable signs of liquor. The place has long been a nuisance and it is the desire of the officers at the fort to have it abated at once. George Denniston went bail for the woman.

THE EOLUS.—The steamer Eolus took her place on the Wickford route today. Since the accident she has been thoroughly overhauled, her hull made as good as new, her bottom recoppered with Brazier's metal and her boiler looked after. A new donkey boiler has been put on deck for heating the boat and for other purposes. The carpets have been renovated and the boat painted inside and out. She is now said to be as good as a new boat and she will enter on the Spring business with the best wishes of the community.

CAPTAIN CHASE.—Capt. Jesse Chase who died in this city yesterday was born in Somerset, Mass. At the age of 16 he went to sea and when only 19 years old was mate of the ship Two Catherines, which dragged her anchors in Dutch Island harbor and came very near being lost. In 1826 he was captain of the bark Hazard of Providence, engaged in the Savannah trade: in 1836 he was mate of the fine ship St. Lawrence of Providence and sailed in her from New York for Mobile, New Orleans and Savannah. In 1847 the ship William Sprague was built for him at Bristol and he sailed in her from New York for Liverpool, San Francisco and Manilla. The ship Belle of the Ocean was afterward built for him at Bristol. While on his way from Liverpool to New York in this ship she became disabled and it was with the greatest exertion that he took her into Charleston, After she was repaired he brought her to New York and then left the sea, having gained for himself a handsome competence and an enviable reputation as a successful ship master.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN THE EVENING.

THE FESTIVITIES CLOSE WITH BALLS AT THE OPERA HOUSE AND THE AQUIDNECK ASSEMBLY ROOMS.—AT THE LATTER A FLAG PRESENTED TO THE ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS.

The festivities of St. Patrick's day came to an end last evening by two grand balls, one at the Opera House and the other at the Aquidneck assembly rooms. The unfavorableness of the weather did not interfere with these affairs and both were well attended.

THE BALL AT THE AQUIDNECK ASSEMBLY ROOMS.

At this place the Ancient Order of Hibernians, a flourishing organization, held their ball and when our reporter looked in at 11 o'clock, the hall was crowded and every inch of room was taken up by the dancers. The gallery was also crowded to its utmost capacity. Upwards of four hundred tickets were sold and the organization will clear over two hundred dollars, although in giving the ball it was not their intention to make any money.

The hall was tastefully decorated with flags and bunting: on the north wall the Irish and American flags were side by side, and below them was a harp of evergreen and above, the letters A. O. H. On each side of these was a shield composed of flags. The sides of the room were covered with flags and streamers were festooned to the chandeliers.

The great attraction of the evening was the flag presentation which occurred near midnight. The order in their handsome regalia were called to the center of the hall where they formed a square. Miss Mary W. Lawton, having the colors in front of her, stepped into the center of the square and read the following poem by Lunt, entitled "The American Flag." She read in a clear, firm voice and with much taste.

Flag of my country! in thy folds
Are wrapped the treasures of the heart;
Where'er that waving sheet is found
By breezes of the sea or land,
It bids the life-blood start.

It is not that among those stars
The fiery crest of Mars shines out;
It is not that o'er battle plain,
Mid heaps of harnessed warriors slain
It floats triumphant o'er the rout.

Short-lived the joy that conquest yields;
Flushed victory is bathed in tears;
The burden of that bloody fame
Which shouting myriads proclaim
Sounds sad to widowed ears,

Thou hast a deeper, stronger hold,
Flag of my country! on the hearts
Than when o'er mustered hosts unfurled
Thou art a signal to the world,
At which the nations start,

Thou art a symbol of the power,
Whose sheltering wings our homes surround,
Guarded by thee was childhood's morn,
And where thy cheering folds are borne
Order and peace are found.

Flag of our mighty Union, hail!
Blessings abound where thou dost float;
Best robe for living Freedom's form
Fit pall to spread upon the tomb,
Should Heaven to death devote.

Wave o'er us in glory still
And be our guardian as now!
Each wind of Heaven starts thy streaks
And withered be the arm that seeks
To bring that banner low!

Miss Sarah Ann Golding than stepped forward and with the following address handed the flag to John J. Byrnes, the president of the order:—

Gentlemen;—Members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians:—

Allow me in behalf of your fellow citizens to have the honor of presenting to you this beautiful flag, the stars and stripes of your adopted country, the emblem of its freedom and liberty.

It is a glorious emblem and one that deserves to be highly honored and fully appreciated. It has taught many a useful lesson to those who have inflicted and to those who have felt oppression. O, let us ever pray that peace and prosperity may attend it. Guard it, and if duty calls, defend it with your lives, for it is the flag of our freedom.

"O long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

The president responded as follows: Ladies:—For and in behalf of the society which I now represent, I thank you heartily and gratefully for this beautiful flag. Among many other things it will be most dear to us as a reminder of the kind friends who presented it to us. And this shall be our motto in regard to it, that its broad stripes shall never be soiled, and its bright stars never dimmed by dishonor while it is in our possession, and farther, that our adopted country of which it is the emblem, shall never want for a true heart and a strong arm while one of our number lives."

Three rousing cheers were then given after which Daniel Galvin made a few remarks in behalf of the flag committee, composed of Sylvester M. Horgan, M. Houlihan, Miss Golding, Miss Lawton and himself. Dancing was then resumed and was kept up until daylight this morning. At 12 o'clock an excellent supper was furnished by Carl Hertgen. The tables looked very inviting.

The general floor manager was M. F. O'Sullivan and much credit is due him for the manner in which he conducted the duties of his office. His aids were P. F. O'Sullivan, James Hopkins, John Murphy, Stephen Buckley, M. H. Dugan, Daniel G. Rouche, Michael Donavan. The reception committee were Jere F. O'Sullivan, M. Butler, James Hopkins, J. J. Donahue, and James Collins. M. F. O'Sullivan J. J. Donahue, D. McMahon, M. Donavan, J. J. Byrnes, M. Houlihan, and M. Byrns formed the committee of arrangements. The music was furnished by the First artillery band, Prof. K. Price, leader, and was all that could be desired.

THE BALL OF THE KNIGHTS OF SAINT PATRICK was given at the Opera House. The body of the hall was floored over in the morning by P. G. Case & Co. All the scenes were removed. The house was dressed tastefully in colors, in the back ground being American and Irish flags. From the upper boxes on either side of the stage a string of small flags hung to the chandeliers and from one of the boxes was suspended an Irish flag and from the other an American flag on staffs. Bunting was arranged around the gallery railing. The orchestra was placed at the north end of the stage and the supper, which was gotten up by Patrick Nolan, was spread in the Perry House. A platform, enclosed in flags, was built from an Opera House window into a window in the Perry House as a means of communication with the supper room.

A large party was present. Dancing did not begin until 10 o'clock when the ball was opened by the grand march. The prompting was done by B. W. Davis of Bristol and the music was furnished by the Newport orchestra, Prof. Faeber leader, of the excellence of which many were loud in their praises.

The gallery was reserved for spectators, of whom there were about one hundred. At about 12 o'clock the ball was at its hight and the scene from the gallery was a brilliant one. D. W. Sheehan was the general floor manager and he had his hands full in making up the sets. The floor committee consisted of Stephen Buckley, C. J. Rogan, P. M. Shea, M. F. Shea, Patrick Sheehan and M. Sheehan. The reception committee were Thomas J. Lynch, president of the society, John Malgan and Thomas Martin. Thomas J. Lynch. John Lyons, M. McCormick, M. McCarty, John Martin and John Feeney composed the committee of arrangements.

There were twenty-six dances on the programme and it was daylight before they were all finished. The ball was a success and we presume that the proceeds nearly paid the necessary expenses, which were unusually heavy under the circumstances and the Knights have every reason to be proud of their fifth annual ball.

FROM A TEXAS EXCHANGE.—On Wednesday, while Probate Judge Bancroft, of Texarkana, was arguing some trivial case before Squire Bush in that city, some hard words ensued between the parties. Bush stepped from his desk, saying: "I adjourn this court to give you a licking," at the same time knocking Bancroft down. After he got up he repeated the blow, knocking him over a bench. Bancroft drew a knife and cut Bush twice—once in the face, from forehead to chin, the other time in the stomach. It is thought he cannot recover.

To clean a browned porcelain kettle, boil peeled potatoes in it. The porcelain will be rendered nearly as white as when new.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. MARIA R. WILBOR.

The answer to her Father's call,
Had long been lived by our loved one,
"Here Lord am I," her life had said,
"Not my own will, but Thine be done."

We mourn her loss, Oh, Father! Give Us strength to do Thy holy will,
Act well our part while here we live,
Believing she is with us still.

God gave, and He has called her home
To dwell with him in peace and rest.
Help us to feel, though tears must flow,
To thank Thee still, for she is blest.

Send Thou "The Comforter" we plead
To husband, children, friends so dear,
Be with them, Father, Give them peace
And aid their hearts. "Be of good cheer."

Ne'er let them feel from thee astray,
Thou God of love, but turn to Thee
And thank Thee, that Thy Son has said
To weary hearts, "Come unto me."

BUSINESS NOTICES.

LELAND'S PALATIAL "ROSSMORE HOTEL" OF NEW YORK.

A correspondent says:—A visit to New York is incomplete without seeing the new and superb Rossmore Hotel. This magnificent and palatial house is one of the finest and most complete hotels in the world. It is a model structure combining all improvements in architectural skill, and is perfect in its internal arrangements. The grand parlors and spacious dining rooms are sixteen feet high, beautifully frescoed and gorgeously furnished. It has elevator, steam, patent chandeliers, electric bells, and every conceivable improvement. The rates for day board and luxurious rooms and suites are even lower than at some other first-class hotels possessing only a part of the Rossmore's excellent advantages and conveniences. The Rossmore is conducted by Chas. E. Leland, of the Delavan, at Albany, and owner of Clarendon, at Saratoga. It is situated on Broadway and 42d street, three blocks west of Grand Central Depot. A free omnibus conveys passengers from this depot to the hotel. The Elevated Railroad passes near by, thus making Wall street and all parts of the city of quick and easy access.

The Western Settler's Chosen Specific.

With every advance of emigration into the far West, a new demand is created for Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Newly peopled regions are frequently less salubrious than older settled localities, on account of the miasma which rises from recently cleared land, particularly along the banks of rivers that are subject to freshets. The agricultural or mining emigrant soon learns, when he does not already know, that the Bitters afford the only sure protection against malaria, and those disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels to which climate changes, exposure, and unaccustomed or unhealthy water or diet subject him. Consequently, he places an estimate upon this great household specific and preventive commensurative with its intrinsic merits, and is careful to keep on hand a restorative and promoter of health so implicitly to be relied upon in time of need.

THOMPSON'S POMADE OPTIME, for dressing the hair.—This fine pomade merits special attention. Purely vegetable, its effect is to soften and refine coarse dry hair, imparting to it gloss and beauty. Unlike many preparations for the hair, it cannot injure, but is highly beneficial, equally so, to the rich golden hued tresses of youth, the darker shades of middle life, or the silver streaked locks of age. 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Dr. Schenck's Standard Remedies.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed, mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

PATENT

SPECTACLES.

The advantages of the Parabola Glasses over the old form of Spectacles, are a greater density of material, perfect surfaces, and Parabolic form. These qualities, united, form the most perfect of lenses. In the perfect transmission of light, joined to their peculiar form the wearer of the Parabola Spectacles is enabled to prosecute the most trying labors of the eye without those distressing results which follow the use of all other glasses. A peculiar and important feature in these Spectacles is witnessed in cases where young persons have been obliged to resort to the use of glasses, from some physical debility having affected temporarily their vision. In such cases the eye soon regains its healthy powers, and the glasses can be laid aside without having had the least tendency to affect the eyes so as to demand their continuous use.

[From Dr. George McClellan, Philadelphia.]

I have recommended the "Parabola Spectacles" to several of my patients, and have received from most of them warm encomiums upon the article. They assert that these glasses do not fatigue the eyes by long use, as is apt to be the case with the double convex Spectacles, while the command of the eyes over the object of vision is much greater. This corresponds with the opinion any optician would form from his knowledge of the principles upon which those glasses are adjusted—so as to converge the rays coming from different quarters to the same focal distance. The eyes can be turned to a considerable extent, therefore, under these glasses, without involving the necessity of moving the head.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1876.

The Vergaro.

BY THE COUNTESS GALETI.

The village which is the scene of my story is called Monte degli Angeli, a strange name for a place where the principal families are all at feud, and have been at feud for generations. No one can now recollect what the original quarrels were about, but the Corbotis do not speak to the Robertis because their great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers once had a quarrel.

The village possesses a Gothic arch and a Gothic church, and is more like a city in miniature than our idea of a village. It is surrounded by a high wall; the streets are paved; there is a town hall and a theater.

Palazzo Barbarosso, is perhaps, the dwelling of most pretension in the village of the Angels. It is large, and at the top of the marble staircase a suite of lofty saloons open one out of another; but except on a very grand occasion (such as marriage, for instance), these rooms are locked up. The family habitually occupy a little dingy parlor on the ground floor, furnished in the style of a country inn. In this apartment, on a little upright horsehair sofa, stuck against the wall, sat Geltrude Barbarossa one Winter afternoon, in company with a friend. The carnival was in full force, and they were talking of the ball held the night before in the theater of the town.

"Did you ever see anything in your life so extravagant and absurd as the dress of the Signora Quintini?" the friend was remarking. "Pink tarlatan and garlands of flowers, at her age, with two daughters married—a grandmother!"

"And I suppose she thinks her hair was dressed in the latest fashion," said Geltrude; "she always imagines that she knows everything."

"Oh yes; it is her favorite boast that she takes in a fashion book, and she always expects everybody to imitate her."

"Those ridiculous flowers how absurd they were! Where did she get them, Filomena?" anxiously inquired Geltrude, who was secretly resolved not to be outdone in finery on the next occasion.

"I will be sure to find out," replied Filomena, whose chief office in life was to keep the rival families au courant as to the minutest details of each other's affairs. She found it answer very well.

"Dear Filomena, I have so much to talk to you about. Stay and dine, senza complimenti. We have tagliatine and chickens. Here, Menegilda," continued the contessa, as a tall and handsome lady entered the room, "just go and see what that scatter-brained cook is after. The servants think of nothing but masquerading and amusing themselves just now. And help dish up, will you?"

The person thus addressed was Ermenegilda Barbarossa, a poor relation, who, in return for her meals, was expected to make herself generally useful. She moved toward the door; but before she got there, Geltrude called her back again, her maternal vigilance having detected a conspicuous want of cleanliness on the part of her little son Pippino, who, during the conversation recorded above had been playing in a corner.

"Take and wash Pippino, and comb his hair; it is too bad of these maids. When were you washed last Pippino?"

Pippino muttered something to the effect that he didn't know and didn't care, but he rather thought it was some time since any attempt had been made in that direction. He was finally carried off struggling in the muscular arms of his cousin Ermengilda.

"Was it you gave poor Gilda that nice blue silk. She looked quite young and handsome last night, only a little too much aware of it, didn't you think? and then her hair—rather too disheveled," said the Signora Filomena, the instant Miss Barbarossa was out of the room.

"Yes, I gave her the blue silk; it was an old one of mine, and I let her turn it," replied the Contessa Geltrude, with an air of modest merit. "I like to be good natured; but if I had seen her in time, I certainly would have made her put up those curls. And then her conduct—dancing like a girl of sixteen among the peasants, the saltarello and all! I assure you, Federigo was much annoyed and desired me to speak to Menegilda on the subject, as I certainly shall."

At this moment Federigo Barbarossa himself came into the room.

"What's that you're saying about poor Gilda?" he asked. "Didn't she look handsome last night! a real Barbarossa; and how she enjoyed herself! Siuora Filomena, I hope you are not tired—a very successful ball, wasn't it?"

Geltrude's brow darkened during this speech, and she made up her mind that her lecture to Ermenegilda should be none of the mildest.

"Federigo, I hope you are not going to say that you approved of her conduct in dancing the saltarello with old Gobbo."

"Well, why not? returned the provokingly good-natured Federigo, who never would even pretend to act the part of domestic tyrant, which his wife was always assigning to him behind his back—"The old vergaro is the most respectable man of my acquaintance, and he has known Gilda ever since she was a little—why shouldn't she dance with him."

Federigo, in his good nature, did his poor cousin an ill turn. When dinner was over, the lecture was delivered, with about as many stings and insults as it is possible for one woman to inflict upon another. Ermengilda was reminded, in the first place, that she was no longer young, and that it was no use trying to appear so by curling her hair. In the second place, that she had made herself absurd by hopping about in the saltarello. In the third place, she was told how entirely she was dependent on her cousin's charity for everything: how that the blue silk was a generous gift; how that the present lecture was delivered for her good and to let her know what a very ridiculous figure she had cut, and what very unpleasant remarks had been made about her. Geltude herself had overheard several, she said, but she had assured everybody that Gilda would never behave so again. She had told her friends that she would speak to her about it, and had begged them no more might be said—and so on.

Poor Gilda did not listen calmly or patiently. Although Providence had been niggardly to her as regards money, it had been very lavish in pride. Often had she rushed from her cousin's house, after a quarrel with Geltrude, and had shut herself up in her own little cottage (almost her own inheritance) until Federigo's apologies and entreaties had brought her forth again. Now she made up her mind that she would go away, never to return—that no apologies and no entreaties, no poverty or want should bring her back.

"I will bear no more insults from you, you insolent, upstart woman," she said. "I have borne enough at your hands; I have slaved for you as none of your servants have slaved. If I have eaten your bread I have earned it by the sweat of my brow. It is I that has been generous not you. What servant would have borne what I have borne, or worked as I have worked, for so little recompense? But if you think I did it for your sake, or for the sake of the wretched alms you have doled out to me, you are mistaken. It was for Federigo's sake, and his children. You say that I demeaned myself by dancing with Vincenzo Vallucci. He is an honest, good man—much better bred than you. He can count back his ancestors for centuries, and they have all been honest men, earning their own livelihood. You don't even know who your grandfather was. Some say he was a brigand; but you give yourself such airs because you have had the good luck to marry a Barbarossa. It is in this that I have demeaned myself—in ever having had anything to do with you. But never, never will I eat your bread or enter your house again, rather will I earn my living by digging the ground; rather, much rather, will I serve Gobbo as a hired laborer than you."

Ermenegilda delivered this speech with all the passion and fire of her Italian nature, then she rose and went forth into the street, leaving Geltrude somewhat dismayed and frightened. Federigo was very angry when he found out what had happened, and went off the next morning to bring back his cousin; but she was not at home; she had been seen walking out into the country.

"Never fear; "she will come back again," said Geltrude. "She always does."

Meantime, our heroine had gone straight to her own cottage, of which she occasionally occupied one room (the other room she let), and sat down on her only chair to think what she should do. She took out her little savings from their hiding-place, and counted them over. They scarcely amounted to twenty pounds, and were all that she had been able to scrape together in her life-time. Still, to her it seemed a large sum enough—quite a capital. The question was how best to lay it out—how to make it fruitful and multiply. She had heard of large fortunes being made of smaller beginnings than that. She might buy a strip of land with it, she might lay it out in pigs or in poultry, and so enter upon an independent existence; but how to begin? At last a bright thought struck her. "I know!" she exclaimed, starting to her feet, "I will consult Gobbo." So saying, she put her small bag of money into her pocket, threw a thick shawl over her head, and started at a quick pace for Vincenzo Vallucci's farm.

"Good-day, Gobbo," said Ermenegilda, entering.

"Oh! Sora Gilda," exclaimed the good man, with unfeigned delight. "Sit down, sit down. Here, Battista, Serafina, what are you thinking about. Bring the wine, and bread, and a slice of ham. Fetch the joncata (only think, two ewes in milk already, Sora Gilda), run make haste.

The handmaidens spread a clean napkin on a little table in front of Ermenegilda, and placed upon it ham, bread, wine, and a junket made of sheep's milk. She ate ravenously, for she had not tasted food for fourteen or fifteen hours. Vallucci sent away the girls, and then fixing his keen eyes upon her, "You are hungry, Sora Gilda?" said he gravely.

She blushed as she replied, "I have been agitated, and have forgotten to eat anything since midday yesterday."

"Is that the truth? or is it that your fine relations let you starve? tell me, my child." The good man's eyes filled with tears, and he took her hand.

"It is not that they let me starve," said Ermenegilda, "but they throw me my food as if I were a dog—that is, Geltrude does—I do not wish to accuse Federigo; and I am resolved than I will never eat their bread again: that is what I am come to consult you about, Gobbo—see, here are my savings! and she produced her bag rather proudly. "I mean to lay them out in someting that will yield me a profit, and begin life independently."

"Is that all you have in the world," exclaimed the Vergaro, pitifully, you poor child! I am a rich man, richer than you know. From father to son, now, for many generations, we have hoarded up money, and it has done no good to anybody. I never could see the use of my riches. I do not care to live another life than the life my father lived before me. I have no education beyond my knowledge of agriculture. I can read no book but Nature. My wants are few and my tastes are simple; but you—you are a lady, you love luxury, you can read books, you would know how to make use of this money; take it, then—take it all. Raffaello will have the produce of the land; it will be more than enough for him."

Ermenegilda recoiled with horror. "I rob you of your money! Oh! Gobbo, what do you take me for?"

"Will you take nothing from me? Are you so haughty!" said Vallucci, sadly. "Will you rather starve, or depend on unkind relations, than accept what an honest man has to bestow?"

"Don't say that I am haughty," cried Ermenegilda. "I respect you more than anybody I know—much more than my own relations, and if I were to receive alms I would rather it were at your hands than another's; but I cannot live on charity. I will work for you, Gobbo, rather, and you shall give me food and drink in return."

"Work for me? Never! A Barbarossa work for a Vallucci? no! But stay! Leave me your 500 lire—you will trust me to lay them out for you, I am sure; and in the meantime you will not refuse a little present of eggs and cheese from an old friend like me?"

"Oh! Gobbo, you are too good," cried Gilda, as a ham, a cheese, a loaf of bread, and quantity of eggs were stowed into the basket. "I cannot take all that, indeed."

"Nay you will not mortify me by refusing my little offerings, I am sure, Sora Gilda?"

"God bless you, then, Gobbo; would there were more like you! Thank you, thank you—no, no more." and so, with a basket on her arm, she at last bade farewell to the vergaro, and turned her steps homeward.

Ermeneglida remained shut up in her cottage all the next day. She dreaded going out into the street, knowing well that the gossips would be very busy just now with the history of her quarrel with the Contessa Barbarossa, and she did not care to answer inquisitive questions, or to meet prying glances. She was glad of solitude and rest, for she had been overworked of late, and over-worried. She locked the door, resolved to let no one in, and dreading a visit from Federigo. She was determined that there should be no reconciliation this time, and thought it would be better to decline all communications with the Barbarossa family. But when the familiar footstep accompanied by a little pattering one, came and stopped outside, her heart beat as though it would burst through her ribs. There was a knock, but she made no sign. Then the door was tried, and found to be locked on the inside.

"Gilda, Gilda," cried her cousin, in a voice she had never been able to resist; "let me in! let us in! Here is Pippino. We want to see you so much, don't we Pippino?"

"Yes," echoed a shrill little voice. "And I won't kick you any more, Gilda, not even if you wash me. Do come back."

Then Gilda opened the door, but with the full determination to resist all overtures towards a reconciliation with Geltrude. She held out her hand to Federigo, took Pippino in her arms and kissed him.

"I have come with a message from Geltrude, to entreat your forgiveness, and to beg that you will return with me to supper," said Federigo, very humbly. "We don't at all know how to get on without you, dear Gilda."

"No," chimed in Pippino, "everything's topsy-turvy, and mamma so cross and disagreeable—crosser even than usual. Come back, there's a nice good Gilda. There's ricotto at supper," he added, in a confidential whisper.

"No, I will never come back, replied Ermenegilda, firmly. "Thank you very much Federigo. I am not ungrateful for all your kindness to me, and it was only for your sake that I stayed so long; but I cannot live with Geltrude—I cannot indeed. We don't suit."

Count Barbarossa was silent for moment, whilst his eyes rested on the ham and cheese, &c., which he espied on the little shelf.

"Those are presents from Gobbo," she explained, blushing a little. "I paid him a visit yesterday, and he insisted on packing a basket for me."

"So you will accept charity from him," said Count Barbarossa, the blood mounting also to his cheeks, "although you will not from me."

"I will accept charity from no one," replied Ermenegilda, haughtily. "I mean to keep myself by my own exertions, as best I may."

"Why, what can you do? What have you got to live upon? Gilda, you are talking like a mad woman."

"Be that as it may, it is all my affair, Federigo. Now I must ask you to go—we shall only quarrel if you stay any longer. Give me a kiss, Pippino, and kiss mamma and Cecchina for me when you get home."

"Well, since you are determined to starve," said Federigo, now both angry and mortified, "I must leave you to your fate—that is until you are in a more reasonable frame of mind, as I hope you will be soon. You are too proud, Ermenegilda."

"May be," returned Miss Barbarossa, with a sigh; "but I cannot help it. God made me so. Good-bye, dear cousin: I hope you will forgive me some day."

Pippino set up a most dismal howl as his father led him away, and refused supper that evening, in spite of the ricotto. His mother remarked that Ermenegilda was a nasty, ungrateful thing, while his father remained silent on the subject.

Another day passed, during which Ermenegilda remained in strict seclusion. But again she had a visitor. This time it was the vergaro, bringing with him more bread, cheese, eggs, etc.

"You know when one leaves money in a bank, one has a right to interest," he explained; "and this is the interest on the 500 lire you left with me."

She was touched with his delicacy, but at first refused his offerings. He insisted and pressed so much, however, that she ended by taking them; but she did so with the firm determination that it should be the last time. When he was gone she sat to work to think seriously of how she could earn her own living, in a manner compatible with the dignity of a Barbarossa. At length she bethought herself that she was the best educated woman in the place: why should she not open a school for the children belonging to the gentlefolks of the village?

Keeping her purpose in view, she visited all the chief families in the village. The friends of the Countess Geltrude were shocked at Miss Barbarossa's ingratitude, and her enemies deplored the miserable degradation to which Ermenegilda had been reduced by the unkindness of her relations. These last offered her money and food, that they might have the satisfaction of humiliating the Barbarossa family; none would listen to her proposal. What did their children want with instruction until the age of ten or twelve, when the boys would be sent to a college and the girls to a convent? Fairly beaten and disheartened, poor Gilda returned to her desolate home, and shut herself up once more. She had no visits except from the poor people, with whom she had always been a favorite. These brought her several little offerings in the shape of eggs, cheese, cakes and biscuits, which on various ingenious pleas they begged her to accept. One wishing her to try her cakes because she was afraid she had put too much saffron in them, and Sora Gilda was such a good judge! Another begged for her opinion on her cream cheese; and so on.

She knew that the vergaro would certainly come again, and although she felt that she must send him away, and bid him never return, still how she looked and listened for him—with what a beating heart she awaited his coming! When she saw him approaching—the inevitable basket on his arm, of course—she ran to the door and opened it.

"I cannot let you in, Vellucci," she said. "You must never come any more—indeed, you must not!" and then all of a sudden she lost her self-control, and burst into tears. Thereupon, Gobbo thought fit to walk into the house without permission, and, taking both Gilda's hands asked her what was the matter. She was utterly overcome, and the relief of having some one to confide in after her solitude, the unkindness she had met with, and the constraint she had put upon herself in the presence of her enemies, occasioned her now to break into a torrent of words. She told all her hopes, her projects, her sufferings—all that had been said to her, and what she had answered; finally, her complete despair and hopelessness—adding, however, with emphasis, that she would rather starve than live on any one's charity.

"Ah, if you were not a Barbarossa," sighed Vellucci.

"Would that I were not," cried Ermenegilda, passionately. "How much better would it have been for me to be a peasant! It is only among them that I have met with friendship, consideration, and delicacy. I honor and respect you, Vindhozo Vellucci far more than any one nobleman I have ever met; You are my only friend; and yet, I must part from you forever, because of ill-natured gossip."

"Nay," said the vergaro, slowly, and speaking as it were with a great effort, "if you were an honest man's wife, ill-natured folks could say no harm of you, or, if they did, they'd have to rue it!"

"Ah!" sighed Ermenegilda, not at all perceiving the drift of his words, "who should ever marry me—I, who have not even the portion that a peasant woman brings her husband? When I was young, I will confess to you, Gobbo, I had dreams—foolish aspirations after a lover who should love me for myself; but I think one only reads of such things in romances: in real life, a portionless girl may look in vain for a husband."

"Ah! if a true heart would content you, you have not far to look for it." Here the vergaro paused, thinking she would at last begin to see his meaning, but no! Gilda evidently though he merely alluded to his friendship for her. He therefore cleared his throat, and resolved to speak out, once for all, what was in his mind.

"Unless you are determined to starve yourself to death, which, your confessor will tell you, would be a great and terrible sin in God's sight"—Gilda shuddered—"there are but two courses open to you; either you must go back to your relations, and live upon their bounty once more—"

"Never!" cried Ermenegilda.

"Or else," contintinued Vellucci, "you may live in peace and plenty, honored and respected by all around you—"

"Oh, how, how, dear Gobbo?"

"As my wife!" Ermenegilda started to her feet.

"Vincenzo Vellucci, you forget yourself!" she exclaimed in horror. If only she could have forestalled him before he had committed himself, she thought. Then suddenly she beheld such an expression of intense and unutterable grief and mortification in his face that her heart smote her as it had never smote her before.

"I have not forgotten myself," the vergaro answered, with quiet dignity. "I have offered you all that I have to give, and a man's love is not to be despised and scorned like that, whether to be a prince or peasant."

Such was the grandeur of the man's manner that Ermenegilda felt deeply ashamed, and began humbly to apologize.

"I beg your pardon," she said, "It was all so—so unexpected I scarcely knew what I said."

"I want no apologies, but a plain answer," said Vellucci, shortly.

He had his pride, and she had wounded it deeply.

"You must give me time to think," stammered Ermenegilda, with downcast eyes.

Her heart, her inclinations, her good sense, her own arguments were all in the vergaro's favor, while the prejudices of her class, and the conventionalities in which she had been brought up, were all against him. Prejudices, and conventionalities are so much harder barriers to overleap than they have any right to be!

"I will give you till Monday," said Vellucci, casting a glance around on the provisions on the shelf, and making a calculation that they would last till then. "On Monday I have business with Count Federigo. I must go to Palazzo Barbarosso; as I pass this house, I shall look for some sign from you. Let it be that red silk handkerchief you wear. If I see it hanging from the window I shall be the happiest of men, if it is not there—" (here his eyes flashed, for he was not without the resentful passions of his race)—"if it is not there, you need not fear that I will ever again molest you by word or deed." And so saying, he went his way.

It would be impossible for me to describe the tumult that raged in my heroine's heart after the departure of the vergaro. She turned over and over again the three alternatives in her mind. She, too, began to see that there were but three. Starvation was the first that she faced; that seemed the only course compatible with her dignity and her pride. She would take her five hundred lire back from the vergaro, she thought, and live on that while it lasted (she had ceased to think of living on the profits of it, and then, if after that she must starve, why, she could face starvation bravely and die a victim—to what! To her own pride; that was the inevitable answer. The more she followed up this idea, the more her good sense, her healthy nature, and her religious feelings revolted against it. To die miserably, only to have it said against her, "poor, proud, sinful, foolish creature," and perhaps no one would ever say a mass for her soul! Then she pictured to herself seeking a reconciliation with the Barbarossas, having to bear renewed insults and sneers in silence. No she could not, would not, contemplate that as a possible alternative. Then the other would rise up before her. She saw herself established in the dear old farm, not as a guest, but the mistress there—loved, obeyed, respected, rich; the prospect seemed temptingly bright sometimes. But then came the dark side of the picture. Geltrude's sneers she could defy, but Federigo's scorn—that would be hard to bear. Then coming to mass among the nobles—that would be a hard trial. Could she endure it? or would it be any easier to bear the vergaro's displeasure, and perhaps his hatred? for never was the Italian born who could not be vindictive.

Tortured by these conflicting thoughts, Ermenegilda saw the days go by, and remained as undecided as ever up to the morning on which Vellucci was to pass.

At day-dawn the red silk neckerchief hung from the window, but an hour afterward was drawn in again, and 9 o'clock saw Ermenegilda still twisting it in her hands. Once more, as if drawn by some irresistible fascination, she went to the window and hung it there. Then she sat down and covered her face with her hands. As always happens when, after agonizing doubt, one settles a question one way irrevocably, the superior advantages of the other alternative immediately present themselves, and for one moment at least one longs to recall the decision. Ermenegilda went to the window; there was yet time; she would take down her flag, but what was the sight that met her eyes? It was that of the vergaro mounted on his shaggy gray pony; he had seen the signal, and what a smile and what a look he gave as his eyes met hers! and what a joyful bound her own heart gave when she found that her own design was frustrated! It was too late now to be miserable and dignified, however well it would have become a Barbarossa.

* * * * *

The year had come round, and it was carnival time again. The village of the Angels was at its gayest, and the bells were ringing merrily on Sunday morning to call the inhabitants to church. Amid all the families that, dressed in their best array, flocked toward the place of worship there was not one so distinguished looking, so happy, or so prosperous as that of the Velluccis. The vergaro was the proudest man alive, in a brand-new home-spun suit, his handsome wife leaning on his arm, looking younger by ten years than when she married, while his soldier son, in his sergeant's uniform, with a scar on his cheek, a medal on his breast, walked by his side.—[New Quarterly Magazine.
